Task ③ The science fiction writer, Frederic Brown, is credited to write the shortest story in the world in 1948, which he called "Knock". The story was this: "The last man on Earth ~~was~~<sup>sat</sup> alone in a room. There was a knock on the door." The story paved the way to a new fashion of writing very short stories.

Some would argue that these, so-called "stories" should not be regarded as such, for they appear to be plotless, two-dimensional and pseudo-philosophical. However, there is a man, who can prove them wrong.

An editor of 'New Times', Steve Moss, is a mastermind behind a competition called 55 fiction. It allowed quick-witted authors to ~~express~~<sup>showcase</sup> their talent in ~~forty-five~~<sup>or fewer</sup> words. Apart from a word limit, there ~~was~~<sup>were</sup> other criteria, such as a <sup>distinguishable</sup> ~~setting~~<sup>and</sup> at least one character present. Some form of conflict and its resolution ~~was~~<sup>was also</sup> required.

Twelve years after the announcement of this <sup>extraordinary</sup> competition (which, in fact, still runs annually), Steve Moss released a collection of the best stories in a book entitled "The World's Shortest Stories of Love and Death". This compilation is rich in thought-provoking, challenging, witty pieces. For example, "In the Garden" by Kope A. Torres depicts a comical situation while <sup>simultaneously</sup> ~~at the same time~~ tackling issues like love, life priorities and other themes. Whereas in "The Search" by Robert Tompkins the punchline gets lost, depressing contemplation taking its place. Other pieces, such as Andrew E. Kunt's "Gratitude" push you to the brink of righteous anger, when <sup>they</sup> ~~bring~~<sup>bring into</sup> the light harrowing topics that we'd rather overlook.

These outstanding stories, despite being short, keep you on the edge of your seat, eyes glued to the words, careful not to glance lower and spoil the experience. The element of surprise is unquestionably an essential part of reading these pieces. Furthermore, what makes them work is a <sup>appealing</sup> ~~snappy~~<sup>I think</sup> title. This book is a must-read, it is guaranteed to blow your mind and put some things into perspective. What are you waiting for? Go read it!
