that prompted Steve Moss, an editor, to start a competition concerning this very type of literary works.

The event, held in 1987 in "New Times", a magazine which still hosts this competition once a year, was called "55 Fiction". To be accepted, a short story had to correspond with certain criteria established by Mr. Moss, precisely consisting of no more than fifty-five words and having such essential elements as a setting, characters, a conflict with a resolution to it. In the end of the competition the most outstanding creations were to be selected by ~~Steven~~ Moss the organizer Steve Moss.

As the end result of this undertaking, 1993 saw the release of "The World's ~~Greatest~~ ~~Shortest~~ Shortest Stories of Love and Death", which is a scintillating book comprised by numerous stories, with each of them evoking deep emotions and addressing issues of undying relevance. For instance, stories "Higher Education" and "In the Garden" both deal with human arrogance and egotism, even though Hope A. Torres' work, alongside the story "The Search" to be taken with irony. Unlike Mr. Bast's story, which leaves the reader perplexed and fearful, the work "Gratitude" by Andrew Hunt gives comfort and hope for the future. The whole array of stories is well-written and surprisingly eye-opening.

All in all the book is ~~an~~ a compelling read and I highly recommend it to ~~those~~ everyone, especially those ~~to~~ leading a busy lifestyle and
